

Responsive Teaching in Action

In-school workshop for teachers and instructional leaders

Overview

Responding to students (on the fly) is a hallmark of great teaching, but it is not easy work. In this rigorous full day workshop, Bron shares three key elements of responsive instruction, demonstrating specific teaching techniques that bring the practice to life. Plentiful examples from the field are shared – spanning primary and secondary levels, and varied learning areas.

Learning objectives

- Describe key insights from cognitive science research, and explain the link to responsive teaching.
- Articulate an argument for more explicit, responsive instruction.
- Describe the limitations of working memory and the implications for practice.
- Explain three fundamental principles of responsive teaching.
- Name and describe responsive teaching techniques that can be adapted across learning areas, domains and levels.
- Practise and refine responsive teaching techniques for use in classrooms.

Workshop structure

Responsive Teaching in Action is a full-day workshop, 9.00am - 2.30pm.

Session 1

Overview of Learning

What it is, why it matters

9.00am - 10.45am

Session 2

Responsive Teaching

Principles and practices

11.15am - 1.00pm

Session 3

Pulling it Together

Collaborative application

1.30pm - 2.30pm

Materials and resources

To support ongoing implementation, every school will receive participant booklets, reflective questions, the masterclass slide deck (PDF), and a full set of technique descriptions to adapt for your context.

Preparing for the day

Once your booking is secured, you will be invited to connect with Bron on a 20-minute planning call. At this time, we can discuss your strategic aims and approaches to instruction. One week before your workshop, you will receive a tailored participant booklet for printing.

Systems and networks

We can tailor this workshop for system partners, multi-school communities or practice, and regional networks. Get in touch with us to discuss a tailored professional learning event.

“ This was an exceptionally engaging day, with so many practical techniques our teachers could trial straight away. ”

Questions?

Get in touch with our Programs Manager, Kate McCully.

kate@bronwynryriejones.com